WE'RE SORRY.

It has come to our attention that some of our marketing has caused confusion. Pantherism is not dangerous. Efforts to suppress menstruation in order to prevent women and girls from transforming into big cats may have been misguided. Pantherism is a natural process.

We apologize for the misunderstanding.

Sincerely,

NOTABLE WOMEN IN HISTORY

FRANCES PERKINS

(1 of 4)

Frances Perkins was born in Boston, in 1880, and was raised in a household that promoted the idea that people became poor as a result of alcohol or laziness. While attending Mount Holyoke College, where she would earn degrees in chemistry and physics, Perkins took a class in American Economic History that required her to visit local mills. She was horrified at the lack of child labor laws and the dangerous working conditions. Perkins credited the experience with inspiring her dedication to social justice. She went on to study economics at The Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, and, in 1910, earned a master's degree in political science from Columbia University. This was ten years before women in the U.S. were constitutionally guaranteed the right to vote. At age 30, Perkins became executive secretary of the New York City Consumers League, a position that allowed her to improve the fire protection in factories and limit the number of hours that women and children had to work to 54 per week. On March 25th, 1911, the Triangle Shirtwaist Factory burned down in New York City, killing 146 workers — most of them women and girls — many of whom jumped from windows to their deaths after discovering that exits were blocked or doors locked. Perkins witnessed the tragedy. It was an event that would change her life. In the aftermath of the blaze, she became executive secretary of the newly formed Committee on Safety of the City of New York. She went on to serve in many positions in New York government. In 1933, President Franklin Roosevelt appointed Perkins to be the Secretary of Labor. She was the first woman to serve in a presidential Cabinet, and the first woman to be in the presidential line of succession. She held the post for twelve years, and played a key role in establishing many of the laws we take for granted, including minimum wage, Social Security benefits, abolishing child labor, and basic worker safety (including the “fire exit” sign).

SAFETY RECALL!

PRODUCT RECALL

RECALL ALERT

END of ACT ONE

written by Eliza Mohene

I am not a spontaneous person.

I am not the friend who sneaks out with you, or gets high with you in your basement.

I am a planner, thoughtful and cautious, a true Capricorn. I am utterly terrified of making a mistake, so I live behind a glass window, watching and yearning.

But under a June sun, immersed in an early summer breeze, high on freedom and the “refreshing” smell of a polluted river,

I did something I never thought I’d do:

I jumped.

It was Friday, June 7th, 2019. The last day of 8th grade. I switched to a private school in February of 2018, halfway through 7th grade. It was hard – I was alone, academically challenged for the first time in my life.

I wasn’t “the smart kid” anymore. I was just a kid.

It was undoubtedly the worst year of my life. But I made it. And then came 8th grade. Where do I begin?

I found my tribe. For the first time in my life I felt a part of something. I took a creative writing class,

I made new friends, I got my grades up, I enjoyed dance class. I laughed, I learned and I loved.

I was content in my skin and in my mind.

So when June 7th rolled around, the tears were still fresh on my cheeks. I had finally found my place, and I was giving it up for a public school full of a couple thousand teens?

I was so full of confusion and regret it was spilling out of me.

But on June 7th, we spent the afternoon at Willamette Park, crying and stuffing our faces with cupcakes.

It’s a beautiful park, picnic tables and rich green grass, teens playing soccer and 7th graders giggling, a feeling of melancholy wafted through all of us as we tried to forget this is the last day of middle school.

About a 3 minute walk through the grass and trees will lead you to a wooden dock on the Willamette River.

So the ten of us walk down, my friends already peeling off clothes to reveal swimsuits. They dive into the murky waters. And here I am, where I’ve always been. Standing behind a thin pane of glass, holding my friends’ clothes, laughing and watching. I’m thinking about the love I have for these people, and the sun is warm on my cheeks, and every moment like this is flooding my thoughts as if a dam has crumbled in my mind. Without thinking, without reason or caution, I shatter the window.

Air I never tasted touches my tongue.

I am whole.

I take off my shirts, my pants. I smother my thoughts, my heart is racing, blood pumping. I take my friend’s hand, and I jump.

I’m in the water for all of five seconds.

The water washes over me and with it comes a revelation.

I am here.

I am alive. More alive than I have ever been. I made it through middle school drama. I made it through the secondary trauma of having suicidal friends, through what seemed like the weight of a thousand worlds pressing down on my shoulders. Through those dark nights when I worried that I would never be enough.

I clung to those worlds like a life raft. My armor in a losing battle, my parachute in a crashing plane.

If multiverses do actually exist, there are infinite worlds out there with infinite “me”s and infinite docks and there are infinite worlds out there where I don’t jump.

And I wonder, where would I be if I hadn’t? Would I be just like everyone else?? What does that even mean?

Without that moment of pure unfiltered joy and freedom, would I sink into a hole of darkness like the people around me? Would I even regret my choice, or would I lose it among all of the other “what could have been”s?

Would I still be at that private school right now? Still sheltered from the harsh realities of the world?

I’ll never know. And I don’t think I want to.

Because as I floated in the Willamette River, my mind skimmed over the past 3 years. The Year of Innocence, the Year of Loneliness, and the Year of Growth. The ambulance that was called, the breakups, the mistakes, the creepy guys on Hawthorne. The songs, the poems, the love, and the loss.

I realize that it’s only just beginning. I have tasted a slice of life and all of its hopes and horrors, and I crave more.

I crave adventures and love and friendships broken and glued back together.

I crave the feeling of hitting the water, the shock colder than the river.

I crave the moment I realized that I could get through anything. Because I am strong and powerful and mighty.

And I am just getting started.
