Katchoo and Francine are like Romeo and Juliet, star-crossed lovers who would find each other in any century you dropped them. At least that's how I think of them. So it wasn't hard for me to imagine our strangers in paradise in the old west of 1870-something—finding each other in spite of war, consumption and thousands of miles of open range.

Hopefully now you see it that way, too.

Once in awhile I would draw a sketch of Katchoo in a western setting and it would spark my imagination. I can picture our hero back in the days of the old west, riding broncos and facing down trigger happy bad guys. Did you notice she called her horse Thunda? Seems like a good name for a spirited animal who will only let Katchoo onto his back. It's also a nod to the great Frank Frazetta's work on the old 1950's comics of the same name.

Careful cowboy, there might be a derringer in that carpetbag.

Billy Gibbons + Sam Elliot
the sheriff.

WiP!

Note: I drew Trigger Warning with the same green pencil that drew Strangers In Paradise.

Over the years when I drew Katchoo in any sort of western mode it just seemed to work. From the old west to modern day Santa Fe, Katchoo is at home by a warm fire under a big sky.

Old West Katchoo's great, great, great granddaughter.
Remarkable resemblance, don't you think?

Old West Francine's great, great, great granddaughter.
Did you know these two have a book, too?
Strangers In Paradise, a love story through the ages.
